

the Senate begin consideration of a Senate resolution submitted by Senator SNOWE regarding mammograms. I further ask unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes for debate equally divided between Senators SNOWE and MIKULSKI, with an additional 10 minutes under the control of Senator SPETER; further, no amendments be in order, and following the conclusion or yielding back of time the resolution be temporarily set aside with a vote to occur on the adoption of this resolution at 5 p.m. this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Further, Mr. President, for the information of all Senators, in accordance with this agreement, the mammogram resolution will be debated this afternoon, with a vote occurring at 5 p.m.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 1

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that at 3 p.m. on Wednesday, February 5, the Senate begin consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 1, regarding a constitutional amendment on the balanced budget. I further ask unanimous consent that only opening statements be in order during Wednesday's session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I announce this agreement will allow us to begin debate on the balanced budget amendment on Wednesday. Senators may make opening statements on Wednesday; however, no amendments will be in order.

I also ask the Senate not be in session late tomorrow to accommodate a number of Senator's schedules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY TO APPOINT COMMITTEE OF ESCORT ON THE PART OF THE SENATE

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint a committee on the part of the Senate to join with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to escort the President of the United States into the House Chamber for the joint session to be held at 9 o'clock p.m. this evening, Tuesday, February 4, 1997.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President of the Senate, pursuant to Public Law 85-874, as amended, appoints the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] and the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] to the Board of Trustees of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, pursuant to the provisions of 20 United States Code, sections 42 and 43, appoints the following Senators as members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution: the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRIST].

APPOINTMENT BY THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the majority leader, pursuant to Public Law 100-458, appoints William E. Cresswell, of Mississippi, to a term on the Board of Trustees of the John C. Stennis Center for Public Service Training and Development, effective October 11, 1996.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12:30, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

ROBERT MORRIS, PATRIOT WHO STOOD UP FOR AMERICA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, one of the disappointing aspects of serving in the Senate is the inescapable and unintended detachment we so often unknowingly experience in our efforts to keep up with the joyful things happening to our friends back home and elsewhere. But it is downright discouraging to discover sometimes long after the fact, that sadness has come to our friends and their families.

For example, the death this past December 29 of a remarkable American, Robert J. Morris, who immediately earned my admiration when I came to Washington in 1951 as administrative assistant to a fine North Carolina Senator.

I had a note the other day from Bob Morris's widow, Joan, about his death. Mr. President, when I arrived in Washington years ago, Bob Morris was the very bright and talented chief counsel of the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The New York Times on January 2 of this year reported Bob Morris's death. The headline read: "Robert J. Morris Is Dead at 82; Crusader Against Communism".

The opening paragraphs of the obituary read as follows:

Robert J. Morris, whose ministrations as counsel for a Cold War Senate Subcommittee bent on rooting out Communists marked a long career devoted to conservative causes, died on Sunday at Point Pleasant Hospital in Point Pleasant, N.J. He was 82 and lived in Mantoloking, N.J.

The cause of death was congestive heart failure, said his son Geoffrey, who added that Mr. Morris had been suffering for more than a year from hydrocephalus, a condition that impedes brain function.

Mr. Morris was chief counsel to the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Internal Security from 1951 to 1953, and again from 1956 to 1958, a period when the country was tormented by the specter of Communist infiltration at every level of life.

A graduate of Fordham Law School, he had served on a New York State Assembly committee in 1940 that investigated New York's schools and colleges for Communist activities. He worked various aspects of the Senate hearings, appearing as a witness now and then and serving as a frequent spokesman and defender of its work.

After those somewhat objective paragraphs, Mr. President, the New York Times launched a full-fledged attack on Bob Morris because of his battles against communism.

I shall omit that part of the New York Times report regarding Bob Morris's death and pick up again when the obituary regains objectivity:

Mr. Morris's interest in politics was part and parcel of his upbringing in Jersey City, where his father was known for organizing opposition to Frank Hague, the entrenched Hudson County boss. That interest sharpened while Mr. Morris served in the Navy during World War II.

Turned down at first because of his inability to recognize the color red, an anecdote he repeated with delight through the years, he became a commander of counterintelligence and psychological warfare. At one point, his son said, he was in charge of writing the threats, printed in Japanese on what looked like money, that were dropped by the plane-load on Japanese cities.

He also interrogated prisoners, and began believing that Communism was a greater threat to world security than most leaders realized—an opinion that would influence the rest of his life.

Politics continued to attract him after he left the subcommittee. In 1958, he made a bid for the Republican Senate nomination from New Jersey, running on a conservative platform that stressed his subcommittee work. Like all but one of his attempts to win public office—he was elected a municipal judge in New York City in 1954, and resigned two years later to rejoin the Senate investigations—it was unsuccessful.

Turning his eye to education, Mr. Morris moved to Texas in 1960 to become president of the University of Dallas. He continued speaking out against Communism and on other issues, which became a source of friction at the university, which he left in 1962.

That summer, he founded the Defenders of American Liberties, a group he described as modeled after the American Civil Liberties Union, "but with emphasis on different positions." The group quickly gained public attention with its defense of former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, who was accused of inciting unrest at the University of Mississippi at Oxford as James Meredith, its first black student, was attempting to start classes there.

In 1964, he founded the University of Plano, now defunct, in Plano, Tex., which was intended to teach mildly disabled young people through "patterning," controversial at the time. It involved putting students through a series of physical exercises, including crawling and creeping, to stimulate nonphysical development in the brain.